Life on a Torpe to Boat Life on a torpedo boat in smooth water may be endurable, but naval officers must look forward to taking such vessels from one Atlantic port to another with acything but auticipa ions of comfort. A British officer, in the latest number of the English Il-Will positively BREAK UP Chiels and Fever INsuffered in a voyage across the Atlantic in These capsules act directly upon the liver, and little easies and appetite.

Can be obtained of the following druggists in the defense of the Halifax harbor. She was lexandria, Val. at 500 per box or of Lewis C. thrus, so e manufacturar, 701 6th street n. w. ashington, D. C., or sent by mail upon receipt price: Warfield & Hall, E. S. Leadbeater & the first thallen, John D. H. Lunt, E. Stabler C., W. D. Hudson, Chss. G. Lenton and W. T. febl4 6m ith febl4 6m June, and but for the assistance of a big troopship which accompanied the two tor-peds boats the latter must have gone to the bottom. The officer expressed the opinion that it is impossible to keep a torpedo boat dry, and at any rate in his case the spare clothing in his looker was scaked through clothing in his looker was scaked through as badly as that which he wore. The little vessel rolled to terribly that the picked sailors on board were very sea-sick—sating had to be accomplished without the aid of knives and forke, and the cooking that could be done was to boil a little water. To eat ham required the effects of two men, one to hold the ham and the other to cut it while the usual way of deal other to cut it, while the usual way of deal ing with saidines was similar, one person holding the next, while the other fish il out the sardines by their tails and transferred them to his mouth. Canned stup was the great standby. Whenever the weather cleared a little the torpode-boat ran along-side the troop ship and received a feet supply of coal in secke. The bunkers held so little that some of the sacks had to be piled up on deck, where, although they were tashed, it was difficult to keep them from going overboard. During the worst gale the troop ship poured about forty-five gallons of all overboard, and the torpedo boat found a comparatively smooth track in her wake To the cil and to the fact that the steering gear did not give way the officer tributes the survival of the little vessel. The flicers were hed in their berths by beard-rigged up for the purpose, and the men usually slept to the coal bunkers, as it was too wet forward for them. During the gales every bing was mashed that could be smashed, even to the swinging table in the cabin. When the equadron finally reached Newfound and it had long been overdue, and the crews had been prayed for in the churches. The torpedo boats were much be worse for the expedition, the stanchions being bent, broken, or goue allogether, and belance in small monthly payments, without inter everything that could be washed overboard est. Final payment will entitle purchaser to a gone, while the men were worn out for the nack of sleep. "Of all the craft that ever I salled in." says the narrator, "the torpedo boat is the worst - the very worst without exception." - Louisville Courier-Journal. THE PROPER MEDIUM -An exchange in speaking of the "writing up" olties in newspapers says: "The advertising that pays a town most and costs the least is the home paper advertisement. It appeals direcely, gives more information, has respect Confectioner and Fruit Dealer, for details and wine favor by its zeal and coofidence. The home paper wields a greater influence for good or ill to the community than any other single agency. If feebly supported, it reflects the weakness of its patronage and is the thermometer of public pride. No paper can rise above the level of its surroundings and live. Few papers fall to measure up fully to the appreciation and patronage they receive. They are rather above than below the high-water mark of public favor and encouragement. We believe that it is time to spend more money with the Virginia papers and less with out-side journals; that it is always better to patronize home enterprises as far as possible; that advertisements in home papers cost less and do more good than advertisements in other papers; that the home paper is more deserving of patronage and shows greater appreciation of the same than the paper that feels no deeper interest in Virginia than it is paid to feel; that a good paper is the best advertisement any town car have; that good papers come only from good patronage, and that the coin which is kept circulating around home is worth over five bundred cents on the dollar.
